JCRA Launches New Website on Mobile Phone Masts in Jersey

The JCRA is launching today a public website that will provide information on mobile phone masts in Jersey. Specifically, the website will provide up-to-date information on the location of mobile phone masts in Jersey, via an interactive map that will enable consumers to view the location of masts and available data on any high frequency wireless emissions in their neighbourhood. The website also will contain information on how sites are monitored and current international standards on safe levels of mast emissions. Consumers will also be able to request information regarding wireless sites in their neighbourhood by contacting the JCRA via the website.

The information presented in the website at launch will be the latest available from each mast provided by the operators. In addition, the JCRA will monitor wireless sites in order to ensure that they conform with recognized international standards. The first audit of the emission data will be carried out over the next few months, and the website will be updated accordingly.

The new website will be accessible via the main JCRA website at www.jcra.je.

JCRA Executive Director, Chuck Webb, says:

“The JCRA is pleased to announce the launch of this website which provides comprehensive information on the location of mobile phone masts in Jersey, plus information on mast emissions. We are attempting to provide this information in a user-friendly format, and look forward to updating it based on our first audit of mast emissions, which we expect to complete in the fourth quarter of this year.”
